The Reid Elevator, a frame grain storage facility, feed mill and general store located at Reid is important as a turn of the century commercial structure built to accommodate the needs of the surrounding agrarian community. At the time this structure was built agriculture was a major industry in Washington County as it is today. Wheat, an important grain crop in the area, requires storage and processing centers. This elevator, built beside the Western Maryland Railroad is typical of many such structures in the Cumberland Valley and remains in use at present in relatively unaltered condition. The location of a small general store in this complex further accentuates the role of the Reid elevator in the day to day life of the nearby population.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Reid Elevator is located on the south side of Reid Road at the Western Maryland Railroad crossing west of the Marsh Pike at Reid in Washington County, Maryland. It is situated on level ground beside the railroad and faces north.

The structure is a two story frame general store and feed mill. Sheathed with German siding the building has been painted yellow. Immediately behind or south of the frame structure are large concret silos, and the elevators, topped with a gable roof from which extends a small square tower, also with a gable roof.

The main or front section of the building which houses the store has four over four pane double hung windows. Some windows at the first story are flanked with pairs of three panel shutters. All have turn of the century period trim. A one story shed roof porch supported with chamfered square posts extends along most of the north elevation which is four bays in width. This portion of the building is covered with a hipped roof sheathed with corrugated sheet metal. Behind this is a three bay one and a half story gable roof section which connects the front part of the building with a three story frame structure with a hipped roof. From the apex of the roof extends a square tower with four over four pane windows in each elevation. It also has a hipped roof topped with a decorative lightening rod.

The building appears to be in fair to good condition and is situated on a two acre tract. The Reid Elevator is said to have been built in 1900.

The location of a small general store in this complex further accentuates the role of the Reid Elevator in the day to day life of the nearby population.

1899, William B. and Howard S. Lehman purchased one acre of ground from John and Catherine Strite and Michael and Amanda Eshelman for $200. (111/183). In 1910 Howard S. Lehman sold his half interest in the property to William B. Lehman for $1000. This deed described the improvements on the property as consisting of a grain elevator and a store located west of the Washington and Franklin Railroad (132/456). In 1926 William B. Lehman sold the elevator property to J.D. Earl and Edna Grace Martin for $7500. It has remained in the Martin family to the present.
